More Than Friends: A sweet Scottish Christian romance (The Macleans Book 2) Autumn Macarthur
One summer day could change both their lives...
Catriona Maclean is determined to give the special needs children in her Edinburgh church a seaside day out. She's a nurse, her older brother is disabled, and she knows just how tough that can be for a family. But when a last minute hitch means she must call on the man she's been secretly in love with since her teens for help, only her promise to God will carry her through.
Alistair Murray has seen Catriona almost every day for the last twenty years. She's a work colleague, his best friend's little sister, one of the guys. They even went to Sunday School together. The last thing he wants is to spend his day off working on her project, but for Cat, he'll do it.
Will a summer's day at the beach, together with a dog and a busload of very special kids, be the miracle they need to show them they can be more than friends?

Uses British English.
Part of The Macleans series. Each is a complete romance following a different couple, so there is no need to read them in order.
34,000 words, 150 paperback pages

Faith, hope, and heartwarming - inspirational romance to make you smile!
