Introduction

13 Hours describes in detail the events which occurred in the Libyan city of Benghazi on the night of September 11-12, 2012, when Libyan Islamic militants attacked US State Department and CIA facilities. The book presents the story in the form of a narrative, as described to the author by the men who participated in the defense of the American facilities and lived through the terror of that night. The narrative ignores entirely the political and intelligence situation which preceded the attack, and likewise the politicization of the events which ensued. Acknowledging that the events of that night have become a political talking point which has been used to discredit members of the presidential administration and US intelligence agencies, the author points out that the men who were actually present on the ground during the attack are more interested in informing the public about what really occurred that night.
