Ditch Your Day Job!: The easiest way to make a living as a writer Dave Haslett
Many people dream of ditching their job, leaving the rat race, and becoming a writer instead. This book walks you through exactly how to do it and shows you just how easy it can be - even if you have no writing or publishing experience.

The method discussed in this book involves writing newspaper and magazine articles about historic anniversaries (these are listed months in advance in our sister publication "The Date-A-Base Book" - published annually).

Anniversary articles are one of the easiest types of article to write. There's never a shortage of newsworthy anniversaries to write about - and finding them is easy, so you don't have to hunt around for ideas. Readers and editors love them, and they're in high demand, so they're easy to sell too. This makes them the ideal way of getting your writing career started - and you can start today!

You'll learn the right way to approach editors to maximise your chances of success, how to get your article ideas pre-approved so you only write what you know you can sell, how to write more advanced articles that the publication's own staff can't, and legitimate ways to sell the exact same article many times over.

You'll also find plenty of tips, tricks, shortcuts and cheats which will further improve your chances of success and significantly cut down the amount of work you need to do to make a great living from your writing. That means you'll also have plenty of free time to work on other exciting projects, such as novels or screenplays - or whatever you'd most like to write.

The first part of the book explains the whole process (in less than an hour). The rest of the book is a complete sample chapter from a current edition of The Date-A-Base Book, which lists more than 300 anniversaries - so you can get started immediately.

There are also some hand-picked links to our recommended article-writing courses, in case you need some extra help getting started.

If you hate your job, need a second income, want to be a writer but don't have the time, or you want to work anywhere you like (home, bed, beach, coffee shop...), at a time of your own choosing, with no alarm clock, twice-daily commute, dress code, boss or stress... then this book could change your life!
